

PSAT/SAT/ACT Changes and How this Effects Advising the Class of 2017 and Beyond

Presenter: Rachel Mead, Executive Director, The Princeton Review Northwest

Are you confused with testing timelines and options for current juniors? Just imagine how the students feel! With the recent changes and those coming to standardized tests, the class of 2017 has unique opportunities to explore for college admissions. This session will provide counselors with some clear tools to help guide students and parents.

Rachel Mead, Executive Director, The Princeton Review Northwest

Rachel started teaching for The Princeton Review in 2009. She works closely with high schools, college admissions, and community organizations. Prior to joining The Princeton Review, Rachel spent 11 years with Sylvan Learning Center and helped develop College Prep programs. She also taught math for three years at Tacoma Community College. Rachel attended the School of Education at Pacific Lutheran University with a double endorsement in math and general science for grades 6-12. She has been working with students on improving their SAT & ACT scores and the college application process since 2003. She is a sought after presenter of Getting Into College seminars and SAT/ACT strategy sessions throughout Washington and Oregon, and is a great community resource for all things related to college applications.
